

ABSTRACT

The method provides a temperature controlled environment for processing semiconductor wafers at elevated temperatures. A hot wall process chamber is used for the process steps. The process chamber includes three zones with independent temperature control capabilities. The method may include rotating the wafers in addition to providing a gas flow velocity gradient above the wafer for improved temperature and processing uniformity results.